

PFISTER PLOT WAS DASTARDLY

Former Alderman Makes Startling Accusations Regarding District Attorney's Office.

LAYS BARE WHOLE VILE SCHEME

Alleged To Have Announced He Was Offered Seven Thousand Dollars For Helping Convict

Charles Pfister.

Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 22.—It is reported that certain persons are prepared to swear out warrants against two well-known La Follette men who are said to have been implicated in grafting by the testimony of former Alderman Murphy before the grand jury. It is said warrants will not be issued should the grand jury refuse to return indictments against the two men.

The warrants will be sworn out by friends of Charles Pfister, who allege his indictment on a charge of having embezzled $14,000 from the Wisconsin Rendering company was due to District Attorney McGovern's ambition to discredit the stalwart leader in the eyes of the voters and with a view to aiding McGovern in his ambition to step into the governor's chair.

ALLEGED CONSPIRACY

These charges that Murphy's disclosures show that a conspiracy was formed against Mr. Pfister, just as was alleged in Pfister's suit against McGovern and the promoters of the Free Press, La Follette's Milwaukee organ, in his recent suit for $500,000 for conspiracy, and his former suit for $250,000 for libel against his newspaper opponent.

Whether the fight is to be made as a result of an indictment or of a personal fight will make but little difference, it being now predicted that the stalwart La Follette controversy will pale into insignificance beside the one coming in the next campaign.

Henry Smith, a veteran city alderman, was called before the grand jury yesterday. He has been a city father longer than any other man and is said to have minute knowledge of the inside workers of the committees and city government.

SAYS HE STILL HAS $7,000 BRIBE

It became current at the city hall yesterday that Attorney John M. Clarke, who represents former Alderman Murphy, testified yesterday before the grand jury that it was he who offered the $7,000 to be given to Murphy if he would implicate Pfister and that the money was paid over to him and is still in his safe. The story goes that when Murphy told the district attorney that his evidence would implicate two well-known La Follette "reformers" it was decided not to summon him and that later the former alderman wrote a letter to the foreman of the grand jury which resulted in his being called.

CITY EMPLOYEES BEFORE JURY.

City Clerk Edwin Hinkell was summoned yesterday, as were also Arthur Conaty, clerk in the water department, and Louis G. Wadule, chairman in the city engineer's department. The city employees may have been asked regarding the way the city democracy is managed, that having a subject of recent investigation by the grand jury. Several other witnesses were examined, but their testimony did not relate to any of the larger matters under consideration. The work of preparing the next lot of indictments has begun, but when they will be returned will depend on developments.

HEARINGS AGAINST COMMON CARRIERS

Proceeding in the Cases of Southern Railway and Clyde Steamship Company.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE]

New York, Sept. 22.—The inquest into the Manhattan Elevated Railroad disaster of September 11th, in which twelve persons were killed and forty-two injured was begun today. Although yet in a critical condition, several of the injured victims are so much improved that the doctors say they will recover. The authorities have been collecting all the data possible before beginning the examination and it is probable that three investigations will grow out of the horror—the inquest, an investigation by the state railroad commission and another by the officials of the Elevated system for the purpose of seeing how the curve can be improved to avoid future accidents of such a nature.

Within the past few days, there has been a story in circulation to the effect that Paul Kelly, the motorman of the road, said that switchman Jackson purposely turned the switch, causing the train to leave the track with the terrible results in order to "do" him (Kelly). This rumor will be run down by the police and if its truth can be proven beyond doubt Switchman Jackson will be punished to the full extent of the law. Kelly, however, insists that the signals on the ill-fated train were wrong.

ODD VOCATIONS OF SOME WOMEN

FACTS GLEANED FROM THE LAT.
EST WISCONSIN BLUE BOOK.

ALL SORTS OF OCCUPATIONS

Wisconsin Women Seem To Be Able to Do Any Work That Man Earns Livelihood By.

Women are, generally speaking, good readers. Books seem to attract them more than men, and almost any sort of book will command a clientele among them. There is one book, however, that does not exert much fascination among women, and that is the biennial product of the state, familiarly as well as officially known as the "Blue Book." It lacks continuity and plot, and whatever of fiction it contains, is so neat it disfigures that the public accepts it as a fact.

The "Blue Book" covers a wonderful amount of good, substantial material relating to women, however, and because they will not study the detail out of the original volume, some of the data is here epitomized and set down for general reading. This is taken from the latest "Blue Book," which is just now being distributed, although the figures relate to the United States census of 1900. Perhaps the generic word "female," used in the tabulation may not be as acceptable to some as a more high sounding word, but it is the term employed, and women will understand, therefore its present use.

More Men Than Women

In 1900, it is shown that in this state there were fewer females than males, the totals being 1,001,480 and 1,007,562 respectively, but there were only 566,849 unmarried females as against 658,847 unmarried males.

The table showing the conjugal condition of the female population at that time is particularly interesting. There were 6,202 married under the age of 20, 69, widowed, and 32 divorced. Of this number there were 27 married under the age of 15 years, and one divorced. The total number of widowed women in Wisconsin was then 59,213, and there were 3,062 divorced.

Men More Illiterate

Concerning the literacy of the sexes, it is shown that 1.1 per cent of the native white males, born of native parents, were illiterate, while only .8 of 1 per cent of the females thus born, were illiterate—a fact that naturally, must be gratifying to women. Of the native white males born of foreign parents, 1.7 per cent were illiterate, while the percentage of the females was only 1.4. Of foreign born citizens 8.8 per cent of the males were illiterate, and 13.3 of the females. This will be a most interesting set of figures to the student.

An interesting little table is shown with reference to the number of white persons of native parentage attending school in Wisconsin in 1900. In totals, the females have the call, for there were $1,023 of these as against 30,782 males, but in the showing as to the number of native white persons of foreign parentage, the preponderance is in favor of the males, the totals of this class being 125,338 males and 122,744 females, and the same rule obtains as to foreigners attending school, of which 8,302 were males and 7,778 females.

Age Records Compared

In the classification as to the age of the aggregate population, some especially gratifying figures for females are found. Up to the age of 90, the number is in favor of the males, but when it comes down to real, genuine longevity, the females make the better showing. Between the ages of 90 and 84, there were 379 females, as again 364 males, but a remarkable incidental feature of this showing is that of this number of aged females, but 130 were natives born, the greater number, 249, being of foreign birth.

It may be recalled, however, that this country is not old itself. Between the ages of 95 and 99, there were 92 females and but 84 males, while those who had attained to the age of 100 years and upward were represented by 22 females and 14 males, and only 6 of these venerable females were native born.

Diversity of Occupations

All this data, however, is not nearly so interesting as the figures showing the wonderful diversity in occupations by means of which females earn a livelihood. The unthinking will say that most female wage earners are teachers, stenographers, dressmakers, and the like, and this is a fact, but few people fully realize to what service females readily lend themselves to earn an honest living. The "Blue Book" fully reveals the entire field.

Milwaukee, for example, has females engaged at almost every known and recognized occupation. In 1900, it had 56 females engaged in agricultural pursuits alone. In the way of professional service, there were 27 females who admitted they were actresses or professional stage people; there were 2 architects, 15 clergymen, 9 dentists, 9 classified as "journalists," 5 lawyers, 34 willing to be taxed "literary and scientific persons," 88 physicians and surgeons, and more teachers and professors than a little. In all, there were 1,713 "professional" women.

Doing Men's Work

At domestic and personal service, Milwaukee then had 69 female barbers and hair dressers, 11 bartenders, 30 janitors, 564 nurses and midwives, 89 saloon keepers, and one watchman. It had a total of 9,299 females in this feature of employment.

In trade and transportation it had 7 female commercial travelers, 2 draymen, 12 foremen and overseers, 24 trucksters and peddlers, 3 livery stable keepers, 195 messengers and office "boys," 5 officials of banks and companies, 5 porters and helpers, 3 steam railroad employees, 2 undertakers, and 897 stenographers. It had a total of 4,732 females employed in trade and transportation.

The more unique forms of service are shown, however, in the manufacturing and mechanical pursuits. Of female workers in this branch,

WEEKLY LETTER OF WASHINGTON

HOW THE CONGRESSMEN WERE MADE DUPES OF EASILY.

AN INTERESTING ACCOUNT

Other Congressional Gossip on the Nation's Law Givers—How Deals Are Consummated.

(By William Wolff Smith.) Special correspondence, Washington, D. C.—Several months ago I received a call from an out-of-town attorney who desired to consult me in regard to the patent medicine business. He informed me that some of his clients had secured control of a patent medicine formerly widely advertised and quite popular, but which had in late years been passed through the bankruptcy courts. The points on which he sought information were three: First, whether it would be possible to secure recommendations for the preparation from Senators, Members of Congress, Cabinet officers and Ambassadors, and how much these recommendations would cost; second, whether such recommendations would be valuable in assisting the sale of the medicine, and third, what was the attitude of the government toward patent medicines and their future. To the first question I replied that the business of securing recommendations from Senators, Ambassadors, etc., had been overdone, and in consequence their endorsements were at a discount while the prices were steadily advancing. Some years ago it was comparatively easy for those making a specialty of this line of work to procure such endorsements as a personal favor or through the secretary or a friend of the party sought. In those days the current quotation for the endorsement of a Senator for a patent medicine or a soap was only twenty-five dollars and ten dollars for ordinary members of the House; those of prominent Senators, the leaders of the House, and Ambassadors ranged from fifty to one hundred dollars. It was not necessary that the party giving the endorsement should really take any of the medicine, although it was customary to present him with from one to a dozen bottles. All he had to do was to supply a photograph and sign the testimonial presented by the agent. The money paid was usually divided among those procuring the endorsement, although I have heard that sometimes a part or all of it went into the pockets of the thrifty Congressman.

Somewhat strange to say the business was killed by too much success. A certain patent medicine company put a half dozen agents to work here and by the skillful pulling of many concealed wires managed to corral almost every Senator and Representative, with a fair sprinkling of representatives of other nations. There is no question the work was done thoroughly or that the recommendations were actually given, as some states provide a penalty for publishing the picture of the giver of a testimonial without their written consent. The managers of the campaign very craftily withheld the publication of these testimonials until all possible had been procured when suddenly Congress awoke to the fact that the country was in a fair way to learn more about the personnel of Congress and the physiognomy of its members, to say nothing of their various ailments, by pursuing the advertising columns than by reading the news columns. From the testimonials but one conclusion could be reached, and that is that the members of Congress have been severely and collectively made the prey to all the diseases known to medical science, and that this great deliberative body was able to set up and transact business solely due to the quantities of a certain medicine which each and every member had consumed. If half the story was true, Congress should have erected a magnificent monument to the patentee of this elixir de vitae.

At first the matter was regarded as a joke on the few whose pictures thus appeared but as one member after another was added to the portrait gallery a feeling of chagrin and soreness developed so that he would be bold and fearless indeed, who would dare approach a Senator or member in these days for permission to chronicle to the world how he has suffered from a complication of diseases of complicated and fearsome nomenclature and had been miraculously restored to perfect health by using certain pills. Moreover, the public is dropping to the fact that had there been such an epidemic of liver, lung and heart trouble in Congress, some mention of it would have been made at the time even at the expense of the gratuitously advertising the wonderful properties of the aforesaid medicine. Moreover, these men having already been cured by one medicine cannot be reasonably expected to go through the same harrowing sufferings to be cured by another merely to accommodate a friend. Consequently such testimonials come much higher and are really worth less than some years ago. At least I so advised the attorney and after receiving corroborating opinions from agents who formerly made a business of securing these recommendations, he let the matter drop.

On the third point I give it as my opinion the patent medicine men had a hard row to hoe for the Postoffice Department, the Department of Agriculture and Congress were all after them hot-foot. Several magazines and periodicals, particularly Collier's and the Ladies Home Journal, are devoting much space to informing the public as to the composition of patent medicines as determined by analyses, in an effort to show the majority consist largely of alcohol and water. The post office department under the blanket authority to prevent the use of the United States mails to defraud, has taken the position that if a medicine is advertised to cure catarrh or kidney trouble, it must contain something that is recognized by materia medica as likely to be more or less effective in such cases, and must not depend solely upon advertisements and a large percentage of alcohol. The Department of Agriculture, which has gradually assumed jurisdiction over all roots and drinks, is also interested along these lines and advocates a pure food bill requiring all patent medicines to be branded with their formula. Congress is thinking along the same lines and is strongly considering the advisability of taxing these medicines. Such a tax would not be imposed, as some erroneously believe, on the alcohol in them, for all alcohol, whether in whiskey or patent medicines, is already taxed to the limit, but would be imposed on the medicines as such, on the ground that a saloon keeper pays taxes to the city, state and United States for the privilege of selling whiskey under close supervision and onerous restrictions, while the vendor of patent medicines plies his trade night and day untaxed.

The above was concisely laid before the attorney who straightway departed. While in New York last week I returned his call. "I am out of the patent medicine business and for good," said he, with suitable emphasis. "Fortunately, I and my friends escaped without loss, but the business is going to the bad. Everywhere the receipts are growing beautifully less; a relentless war is being waged against these medicines by influential persons, the government, the prohibitionists, and the whiskey men. The prohibitionists complain that prohibition fails when the sale of such medicines is unrestricted; the whiskey men say their business and the public purse suffer alike. Sales have fallen off tremendously within the past year. One of the largest firms in the country reports that the inquiries from its advertising have decreased fifty per cents and its receipts correspondingly. Not so long ago an advertising agency was carried down by backing the advertising of a patent medicine firm which could not meet its bills and which the agency in self-defense undertook to finance. The liabilities of some firms to advertising agents and of the latter to the newspapers run into the millions. With the tremendous advertising bills accumulating and receipts constantly diminishing the end is inevitable."

You may do what you please to the private car lines but bands of the railroads" is the ultimatum of the railroad lobby to Congress, the Interstate Commerce Commission and those behind the agitation for regulated railroad rates. By this sop to the public the railroads propose to postpone if not to escape altogether from what they regard as "unwarranted interference" in their affairs. That the scheme is plausible and likely to prevail is undeniable. The clamor for the regulation of railroad rates was largely inspired by commissioners handling fruits shipped in privately owned stock cars. The abolition of private cars will, so the railroad lobbyists believe, put an end to their complaints and to their ceaseless agitation.

The Interstate Commerce Commission would be highly pleased to have its power extended over the private car lines and Congress could virtually point to such action as calculated to remedy all ills connected with railroading. This is undoubtedly the program of the railroads, already antagonistic to the car lines and eagerly awaiting the day when they shall fall like an overripe plum into their hands. The logical outcome will be the organization of corporations owned and controlled by the railroad magnates instead of outside parties, who will acquire the private car lines at a fraction of the value of their equipment which will be almost worthless when the present companies are legislated out of business. Thus Congress, the cattlemen and commission merchants, and, above all, the railroads, will be pleased. But how about the immense body of shippers and consumers who are interested in the rates on other products than cattle and fruit, and who are seeking relief from the oppression of the discriminating rate, secret rebates and the manipulation incidental to private switches, private terminals and the like? Will they complacently watch the railroads absorb the private car lines by the help of Congress and the Interstate Commerce Commission and think their pains have been relieved? By all means let Congress regulate the private car lines, but it should stick to the main proposition to regulate railroad rates, passenger and freight, and not permit itself to be sidetracked, willingly or unwillingly or some day the people may wake up.

General Sherman's Reception.—At a meeting of citizens, held at the office of Messrs. Sloan & Patten, Sept. 20th, 4 p.m., Hon. I. C. Sloan was called to the chair, and James Sutherland made secretary.

On motion of Hon. I. C. Sloan, J. M. Burgess, Dr. J. B. Whiting, J. R. Penick, Esq., Hon. Hamilton Richardson, Wm. M. Tallman, Esq., Hon. John Mitchell and Dr. R. B. Treat were appointed a general committee to make arrangements as they deemed proper on the reception of General Sherman and staff during their visit to our city.

I. C. SLOAN, Chairman.
JAMES SUTHERLAND, Sec'y.

City Items.—Some four or five fast horses arrived here last night from St. Louis. The promise of great times at the State Fair is very flattering.

A banquet to General Sherman is to be given at the Hyatt House on Thursday evening of next week.

Our streets today have been almost wholly deserted by the farming population, this fine weather demanding their attention at the threshing machine.

F. Ray Comstock pulled off a coup on the other managers when he secured George Evans, "The Honey Boy," for the leading role in this year's production of "The Runaways." There were any number of managers who were willing to star Evans in a musical comedy. Some say they even had it in their minds to have a new the laughs. "The Runaways" will be presented at the Myers Grand Monday, Sept. 25.

"The Train Robbers," which will be presented by A. E. Davidson's company at the Myers Grand Saturday matinee and night, is founded upon the recent hold-up of the Pacific Railroad company's Air Line Limited, but unlike any other play dealing with characters of this kind no attempt has been made to make a hero out of the leaders of the outlaws, nor in any way surround him with a glamour of romance. The fact of the robbery is but an incident in an admirably constructed play, the characters of which are in every way human, doing just those things which real people placed in the same position would do and saying those things that real people would say. Simply told, richly embellished with scenery and staged with attention to small detail which always characterizes a perfect production, the performance of "The Train Robbers" is far above the average melodramatic entertainment and worthy of the patronage accorded it.

"Parsifal," which will be presented at the Grand, offers unusual opportunities for gorgeous costuming. The costume plates for the production were prepared by Percy Anderson and Thomas Heskellwood of London.

Mr. Anderson, who has long been associated with Sir Henry Irving at the Lyceum, made the plates for Kundry, for Miss Taylor's use, and others were painted by Mr. Heskellwood, who is one of the best-known authorities in heraldry in England.

ONE OF THE "RUNAWAYS" is undoubtedly the funniest little man on the stage. When he saw the other top-liners in vaudeville getting out of that line for musical comedy, he just pined for a chance. His contract did not expire until this year and it was not many minutes after his return that he was offered a place in the "Runaways."

for money in the national campaign, for the candidate himself. Parker would show up his books for corporation money it would give you a fit. He never rejected a dollar in the world. He would take every dollar that was paid to him."

This all goes to show that the business of the great mutual life insurance companies has been very loosely conducted, and that political graft and corruption was a part of the program.

If these companies had been compelled to distribute their surplus once a year, or at least once in five years, as the new law in Wisconsin contemplates, there would be no cause for complaint or investigation. Good wholesome laws contribute to honesty as well as protection, and the insurance business is sadly in need of this class of laws. A surplus, representing many millions of money is a dangerous fund, and it is easy to understand how the men who have it in charge, can satisfy conscience as to how it shall be used.

These men may be ever so honest, yet controlled by judgment so warped as to satisfy themselves that the wrong is right. Their methods and work is passed upon by a close corporation, and many things which appeared right in the star chamber, presents a different aspect in the light of public sentiment.

It is safe to say that no more funds of this class will be contributed to political parties. The men who are responsible for this money are the trusted servants of the people. They need protecting against themselves, and wholesome laws will be beneficial to them, as well as to the people at large. Remove temptation from positions of trust, as far as possible, and honesty will be promoted.

The reserve fund required by law is the money set aside for the protection of policy holders. No company has a right to a surplus beyond the amount necessary to conduct the business in a business like way. This surplus belongs to the policy holder and should never have been taken from him.

PRESS COMMENT.
Marion Advertiser: We can see that a political reaction has begun. That is, the "machine" is failing in its power to convince the grangers of the state that all the Half Breeds are angels and the Stalwarts grafting devils.

Oshkosh Northwestern: The people of Fond du Lac will vote today on the question of increasing the price of saloon licenses from $200 to $500. This is a question that is pretty sure to be brought up in Oshkosh one of these days.

Fond du Lac Bulletin: It is claimed that in Milwaukee the telephone girls are marrying so fast that it is hard to fill their places. Fond du Lac has not experienced the fever yet, but with the boy of pretty misses there is liable to be a shortage in Fond du Lac.

Madison Journal: The independent book companies which bought a nomination of the governor for $1,500 must feel in the presence of the New York Life's $50,000 campaign contribution as happy as the boy who catches Muscallonge with red flannel bats.

LIBRARY TO BE OPEN MORNINGS

ORDER WILL GO INTO EFFECT NEXT MONDAY.

TWO HOURS: TEN TO TWELVE

Number of Books That Are Loaned Will Be Greatly Increased—More New Books.

Beginning Monday the Janesville public library will be open every morning except Sunday for two hours, the doors being unlocked at ten o'clock and closed again at twelve. The order for this was passed at the last meeting of the Board, the matter being brought up because numerous complaints had been made. In discussing the question it was stated the majority of libraries in the country were open for an hour or more every morning and that in all cases the patronage at this time was large enough to warrant the continuance of the plan. Many find the morning a more opportune time for securing books or working in the reference library, particularly the ladies of the clubs who use the reference volumes to a great extent during the winter months.

More Books to Rent

At the same meeting it was determined to increase the number of books that are rented from the library. At present the institution has about a dozen volumes, all duplicates of volumes on the free shelves, which are issued at two cents a day. By this method the great demand for popular fiction is partly met and the extra copies of books used are paid for by the rentals. All that is made beyond the cost of the books will be applied now to purchasing more volumes and at each, which will be placed on the south wall of the library proper. With the present fund the librarians expect to procure between sixty and a hundred books within the next month. This renting of books does not cater to those who have money because no volume can be procured by paying rent, except there be one or two of the same on the free shelves. But for a number of books each month there is such call that many prefer to pay a small rental to waiting. No new books are published during the summer, but by October the first of the season will be on the market and at this time the new volumes for the rental shelves will be purchased.

Schedule Board

In the near future a schedule board, bearing the open hours of the library, will be placed on the front of the building for the benefit of the general public. The announcement that will be made is that the library is open in the morning from ten to twelve o'clock and from half-past one in the afternoon to nine each evening on every day except Sunday.

MRS. GRAMKE IS FOUND DEMENTED

Woman Who Was Nearly Frozen to Death Last Winter Was Taken to the Asylum This Morning.

Mrs. Charles Gramke, residing at 35 Linden avenue, whose actions for several months past have led relatives and friends to believe her mind unbalanced, has been examined at the request of her husband and pronounced insane. She was taken to the Mendota asylum this morning along with the nameless stranger from New York. One night last winter, it will be remembered, Mrs. Gramke wandered away from her home in very scant attire and was nearly frozen to death when found by the searching party.

THOUGHT THAT SHE HAD STOLEN HORSE

But Mrs. Andrew Snyder of Footville Later Discovered That It Was a Case of Mistaken Identity.

"That's our Billy! That's our BILLY!"

With these exclamations, Mrs. Andrew Snyder of Footville pointed to a nice-looking black equine that was drawing a theatre bill-board up and down the streets this afternoon. Someone in the People's drugstore called up the city marshal, and he was on the scene a few minutes later. On inquiry it was found that the animal came from Kemmerer's barn. Mrs. Snyder was very certain that it was the same one stolen from the farm where she lived on the 11th of August. It was learned at Kemmerer's stables that the animal had been owned by them for fifteen years and is the mother of the two horses of the Bubb's brewery team.

An Important Business Change

It will interest many Janesville people to learn that Mr. J. W. Van Beynum, a well-known resident of the city and holding the office of clerk of the local Woodmen camp, has associated himself with the Herbert Holme dry-goods business. Though not having followed this business for some time, Mr. Van Beynum is a dry-goods man of wide experience and at one time was with the T. A. Chapman Co. of Milwaukee. Mr. Holmes is to be congratulated on having secured the services of Mr. Van Beynum, whose genial manner has made him a host of friends in and around the Bower City.

METHODISTS ARE TO COME TO JANESEVILLE

Wisconsin Conference Will Meet in This City in 1906 for Their Gathering.

Janesville was selected at the Wisconsin conference at Wausau yesterday for the Wisconsin conference of the Methodist church, no other invitation being received.

The conference last met in Janesville thirty-five years ago. Candidates who had passed their examinations were advanced in their studies and continued on trial. Eliza A. Ware, M. Thomas, and J. H. Paul were elected to local deacons' orders and Charles Wentworth to local elder's orders.

The Rev. Hugh B. Morgan's request to be permitted to withdraw from the conference to permit him to join the Welsh assembly and accept a call to a Welsh church in Minneapolis was granted. The announcement of Dr. D. C. John, presiding elder of the Oshkosh district, yesterday in the Methodist conference to the effect that he had decided to retire from active work, caused quite a sensation among the members. Most of them could not understand the course taken by Dr. John. Though he is considerably advanced in years, he is still in good, stalwart condition and apparently able to battle with the powers of evil for a good many years to come. Bishop Wilson held his first cabinet meeting yesterday afternoon. Being a new bishop, this is his first visit to this conference, and he will have to rely upon the advice of the members of the cabinet until he can become somewhat acquainted with the conditions. As everything seems to be harmonious in the conference, the course of business will be comparatively easy.

The outside suggestion that an effort may be made to reduce the number of districts from five to four has not thus far found an echo in the conference.

AFTON BOASTS OF CHURCH GOER WHO HAS PASSED THE CENTURY MARK TWO YEARS

Mrs. Susan D. Crossman Listens to Sermon Preached by Grandson Sunday Last.

Afton, Sept. 22.—Honored probably beyond any other minister of the gospel in this country, was Rev. C. J. Eddy, as he occupied his accustomed place in the pulpit of the First Baptist church here last Sunday afternoon, for he had as one of his congregation, a woman who is 102 years and 6 months old, and that woman his own grandmother, Mrs. Susan D. Crossman. Sitting erect in a front pew, without spectacles or ear trumpet, Grandma Crossman remained during the preaching service and at its close stood up to receive the greetings of friends who came forward to shake hands and tell her how glad they were to see her present. "I am glad to be able to be here," was her ready response and as it made a five mile journey for her in going from and returning to her home, one can see what it meant for one of her years to attempt such a trip. Afton people naturally wonder if any other town in the land can boast of a church goer who has passed the century mark.

FARMERS PLAYED MILTON BUSINESS MEN OFF FIELD

Defeated Them In Baseball Game On Monday by a Score of Five to Naught.

Milton, Sept. 22.—The husky farmers tackled the business men in a baseball game Monday, and made the "vils" look like "thirty cents." They gave the villagers nine big round goose eggs and piled up five large, juicy scores for themselves. In fact the pumpkin huskers played all around the city lads, both at bat and in the field, but despite the score the game was a good one for players who do not get in a game but once or twice in a year.

CHAPTER XV.

THE TOMB OF THE PHARAOH.
It was far into the tenth night that Kenkenes arrived in Thebes. On the sixteenth day Rachel would begin to expect him, and he could not hope to reach Memphis by that time. She should not wait an hour longer than necessary. He would get the signet that night and return by the swiftest boat obtainable in Thebes. The dawn should find him on the way to Memphis.

He entered the streets of the Libyan suburb of the holy city and passed through it to the scattering houses set outside the thickly settled portion and nearer to the necropolis. At the portal of the most pretentious of these houses he knocked and was admitted.

He was met presently in the chamber of guests by an old man, gray hair and bent. This was the keeper of the tomb of Rameses the Great.

"I am the son of Mentu," he said, "thy friend and the friend of the incomparable Pharaoh. Perchance thou dost remember me."

"I remember Mentu," the old man replied after a space that might have been spent in ruminating or in collecting his faculties to speak.

"He decorated the tomb of Rameses," the young man continued.

"Aye, I remember. I watched him often at the work."

"Thou knowest how the great King loved him."

The old man beat his head in assent.

"He was given a signet by Rameses, and on the jewel was testimony of royal favor which should outlive the Pharaoh and Mentu himself. It was lost. But the place in which it was lost is small, and I would search for it again."

By this time the old man's face had become inquiring.

"There is need for the signet now. It was lost in the tomb of the incomparable Pharaoh. May I not visit the crypt? I would go this very night."

The keeper's face sobered, and he shook his head.

"Deny me not, I pray thee," Kenkenes entreated earnestly. "Never was a greater stake upon the saving of time than in this strait, which is the peril of spotless womanhood. I can go alone. There is no need that thou shouldst waste an hour of thy-needed sleep for me. I pledge thee I shall conduct myself without thee as I should beneath thine eye, and none need ever know I went alone."

The ancient keeper weakened at the earnestness of the young man.

"Cunst thou open the gates?"

"I have not forgotten from the daily practice that was mine for many weeks."

"Then go, and let no man know of this."

Kenkenes thanked him gratefully and went at once.

In chambers hewn in solid rock the monarchs of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries were entombed. All along the walls of the gorge nature had secured the sacred resting place of the sovereigns against trespass from the end and sides of the classism, and Egypt had dutifully strengthened the one weak point in the fortification—the entrance by the gateway of granite. But there was no vigilance of guards.

Whoever knew how to open the gates might enter the valley. The secret of the bolts was known only among the members of the royal family and the court. To Kenkenes, whose craft as a sculptor had taught him the intricate devices used in closing tombs, the opening of these gates was simple.

He let himself into the valley, and, closing the valves behind him, went up the tortuous gorge, darkened by the shadows of the walls. He continued

SCROFULA FROM PARENT TO CHILD

The laws of heredity are inviolable and the diseased blood of parents is handed down to children in the form of Scrofula. Being thus deeply rooted nothing can reach the disease but a constitutional remedy. The very foundation of the blood is diseased, and until it is purified and made strong, those who are born with a scrofulous tendency cannot have the blessing of robust health.

Cleveland, O., 123 Brownell St. I inherited Scrofula from my ancestry, and this means, of course, weak, impure blood and a run-down, debilitated condition of the system. Treatment by the good S. S. S. did not last long when I took it. It promotes appetite and digestion gives strength and energy, builds up the entire health in every way, and in addition to being a constitutional purifier it adds to its success as a remedy for Scrofula. It did more for me than anything I have used, and with pleasure I recommend it. S. S. S. completely cured me of this blight.

MRS. LOUISE COHEN,

S. S. S., the king of blood purifiers, is the medicine that is required, because it changes the quality of the blood by cleansing it of all poisons and impurities, building it up and strengthening the entire system. When S. S. S. has restored the blood to a healthy condition and forced out the scrofulous deposits, there is a sure return to health. No remedy has ever been found to equal this great vegetable preparation for the cure of all diseases arising from a diseased or impure blood supply. If you have Scrofula or any tendency to it, write us.

THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., Atlanta, Ga.

past the mouth of the valley's southern arm, whereof were entombed the kings of the eighteenth dynasty. Here, in this open space, he could see the circling bats, which before he could only hear above his head. Somewhere among the rocks up the moonlit hollow an owl hooted. But the tombs he sought were in the upper end of the main ravine.

With trembling hands he pushed the doors rough with inscriptions, and the great stone vaults swung ponderously inward, the bronze pins making no sound as they turned in the sockets. Kenkenes entered and closed the portals behind him.

Instantly all sound of the outside world was cut off—the sound of the wind, the chafing of the sands on the hills above, the movement and cries of night birds, beasts and insects. Absolute stillness and original night surrounded him.

With all speed he lighted his lamp, but the flaring flame illuminated only a little space in the brooding, hovering blackness about him.

He moved forward, his path only discovered to him, step by step as the light advanced, the sumptuous frescoes done by the hand of his father emerging, one detail at a time. The solemn figures fixed accusing eyes upon him from every frieze; the passive countenance of the monarch himself confronted him from every wall. One ponderous chamber after another he traversed, for the tomb penetrated the very core of the mountain.

The innermost crypt contained the altars. This was the sanctuary, the holy of holies, never entered except by a hierarch.

When Kenkenes reached the final threshold he paused. Thus far his presence had been merely a midnight intrusion. If he entered the sanctuary, his coming would be violation. He thought of the distress of Rachel and died.

The first alabaster altar glistened suddenly out of the night like a bank of snow. Kenkenes' sandal glistened on the sandy dust that lay thick on the floor. Not even the keeper had entered this crypt to remove the accumulated dust of six years.

In this chapel the signet had been lost.

Kenkenes set his light on the floor and began his search. The first time he searched the floor he laid the lack of success to his excited work. The second time the perspiration began to trickle down his temples. Thereafter he sought lengthwise and crosswise, calling on the gods for aid, but there was no glint of the jewel.

At last, sick with despair, he sat down to collect himself. Suddenly across the silence there smote a sound. For a moment Kenkenes sat transfixed and in that moment the sound came nearer. He remembered the injunction of the old keeper. Human or supernatural, the newcomer must not find him there. He leaped behind the altar of Shaemus, extinguishing the light as he did so. He flung the corner of his kamea over the reeking wick that the odor might not escape, but his fear in that direction was materially lessened when he saw that the stranger bore a fuming torch.

On one end of the short pole of the torch was a knot of flaming pitch; on the other was a bronze ring fitted with sprawling claws. The stranger set the light on the floor, and the device kept the torch upright. He crossed the room, Kenkenes rapped on the table, in a little time an Egyptian emerged from under the counter on the other side. Understanding at last that the guest wished to be fed, he staggered sleepily through a door and presently reappearing, signed Kenkenes to enter.

The room into which the young sculptor was conducted was too large to be lighted by the two lamps, hung from hooks, one at each end of the chamber.

Down either side, hidden in the shadows, were long benches, and from the huddled heap that occupied the full length of each it was to be surmised that men were sleeping on them.

Above them the slatted blinds had been withdrawn from the small windows and the room was filled with the smell of smoke.

By the deeply fringed and voluminous draperies and by the venerable beard, rippling and streaked with gray, the young sculptor took the stranger to be an Israelite. As Kenkenes looked upon him he was minded of his father, the magnificent Mentu.

There was the bearing of the courtier, with the same wondrous stature, the same massive frame. But the delicate features of the Egyptian, the long, slim fingers, the narrow foot, were absent. In this man's countenance there was majesty instead of grace; in his figure, might instead of elegance.

The stranger stood in profound meditation, his splendid head gradually sinking until it rested on his breast. The arms hung by the sides. The attitude suggested a sorrow healed by the long years until it was no more a pain, but a memory so subduing that it depressed. At last the great man sank to his knees with a movement quite in keeping with his grandeur and his mood and bowed his head on his arms.

Pressed down with awe, Kenkenes followed his example, and although he seemed to kneel on some rough chisel mark in the floor, he did not shift his position. The discomfort seemed appropriate as penitence on that holy occasion.

After a long time the stranger arose, took up the torch and quitted the chamber. He went away more slowly than he had come, with reluctant step and averted face.

When night and profound silence were restored in the crypt, Kenkenes regained his feet and, examining the irritated knee, found the offending object clinging to the impression it had made in the flesh. The shape of the triple sent a wild hope through his brain. Groping through the dark, he found his lamp and lighted it with trembling hands.

He held the lapis lazuli signet!

He did not move. He only grasped the seal tightly and panted. The sudden change from intense suspense

A SUGGESTION FROM THE TYROL

Those flat plateaux of felt are really treasure-trove to the milliners, for there is simply no end to the clever devices that are wrought out with one or two of these for a foundation. Quite a charming suggestion of a Tyrolean chapeau is worked out in the illustration, the plateau being the hunter's green, and the eagle feathers displaying the natural brown colorings. As usual, the plateau is inlaid with velvet, quite a rich deep green, being used, and the bandeau that serves to shape the headsize shows the essentially becoming tilt at the left side which is such a characteristic feature of the novel modes. Brown tulle veils the bandeau, and the picot-edged satin ribbon shows the body in brown, with quite a wide border of green moire, this combining the dom inant tones of the hat.

To intense relief had depraved man of the power of expression. Only his physical makeup manifested its rebellion against the shock.

He examined the scarab. The cord by which it had been suspended passed through a small gold ring between the claws of the beetle. This had worn very thin and some slight wrench had broken it.

"Ah!" he exclaimed aloud. "It is even as I had thought. But let me not seem to boast when I tell my father of it. It will be victory enough for me to display the jewel and abashment enough for him to know he was wrong."

He ceased to speak, but the echoes talked on after him. He shivered, caught up his light and raced through the tomb into the world agam.

It was near dawn, and the skies were pale. He was hungry and weary, but most impatient to be gone. He would repair to Thebes and break his fast.

Thereafter he would procure the swiftest boat on the Nile and take his rest while speeding toward Memphis.

The inn of the necropolis was like an immense dwelling, except that the courts were stable yards. The doors, opening off the porch, were always open and a light burned by night within the chamber. So long and so minutely had it burned that the chamber Kenkenes entered was smoky and redolent of it. Aside from a high, bench-like table running half the length of the rear wall, there was nothing else in the room. Kenkenes rapped on the table, in a little time an Egyptian emerged from under the counter on the other side. Understanding at last that the guest wished to be fed, he staggered sleepily through a door and presently reappearing, signed Kenkenes to enter.
